The Responsibility of Reputation

“What church did you say you belong to?” The question caught me off guard.

“Mennonite Church Canada,” I responded, and continued to explain that we are a Protestant denomination.

“Oh, I know the Mennonites,” interrupted the US Border Patrol Officer. Then he continued to question me about some of our theological positions. I was a bit alarmed, not anticipating that a theological debate would determine whether I would be allowed to board the plane.

“I am just talking with you,” explained the Border Officer. But he held onto my passport and fixed his gaze on me as well.

“I know the Mennonites,” he continued. He explained how the Mennonites were good people who believed in service and helping others.

This is not the first time I have experienced such accolades for our perceived peaceful character. But this conversation was different. The Border Officer also proceeded to explain Anabaptist history to me. I was about to give him a passing grade, until he credited Menno Simmons with the selfless act of Dirk Wilms, pulling his pursuer from the frozen lake. He did seem to know a great deal about us. I almost suggested that maybe he should become a Mennonite as well. But he still had a firm hold of my passport.

The conversation ended and he wished me and my family of faith God’s blessing and wisdom.

Each time such a conversation occurs I am left feeling somewhat overwhelmed. We do have a good reputation. Such a reputation has been formed by generations of faithful living and humble service to God.

To accept the benefit of a reputation is to also accept the accompanying responsibility. It is a responsibility to our past, present and our future. A good reputation bears accountability to our past. The sacrifice and testimony of past generations requires a consistent display in the present if the reputation is to remain intact.

But a good reputation is also accountable to the present. The repute of our current faith movement requires the on-going display of generosity and self-giving service.

This is not a responsibility unique to us as congregations and individuals in Mennonite Church Canada. It is a common responsibility for all who claim to be followers of Jesus Christ. A cynical secular society demands more of faith movements. The integrity of service, generosity and joyful sacrifice is the only platform acceptable for faith claims of redemption, restoration and salvation. No matter what we say, or how we say it – the hearing will only come through the experience of radical, self-giving love. This is how the Word of God came to us.

I often shudder at the responsibility of living up to the expectations modeled by those of my past and present community. To be a church that bears the reflection of Jesus Christ is not an easy endeavour. Jesus is rarely restrained by rules. He rejects stereotypes and prejudices. He never plays it safe. But a church that resembles him is a church that awakens a divine hunger in all who experience it. The character of our engagement with life today will either solidify or erode a good reputation of the church.

May we continue to be a family of faith that will provide generations of commendations for our children and their children – so that all who speak of us wish to bless the God we serve.

Sharing Corner ...

The lovely bunch of fair maidens pictured above are the ones who took the course – Experiencing God by Henry and Richard Blackaby, from Dec. 2013 through February 2014. It is a 12 week course. At the finish, we were to respond about the course and what we thought of it. Below is a combined answer from all of them of how they felt.

First of all I would like to say it was enjoyed by all, even if we did have to do homework, plus we found time for prayer, song and laughter. The course opened our eyes to what God really wants from all of us and that He is always at work around us.

Having a personal relationship with God is really emphasized and I feel we all came away with a better understanding of God and His son Jesus Christ, through the Holy Spirit. We learned how to pay attention to our heart and mind whether listening or studying. We are not be afraid to ask God what He wants from us and what we need to do to enhance our relationship with Him.

We enjoyed our sharing time about what spoke to us each week. The God moments, were awesome, along with our prayer concerns for us and others. The discussions after each lesson were also very helpful. Working toward a personal relationship with God, makes it a lot easier to stay focused on Him and He gives us the ability to conquer our foes and woes and enjoy the good times. Thank you Jesus.

Not Okay With Violent Play, from the March 2014 Equipping #144

Every day, Cody and Makai are exposed to violent play as young children, even toddlers, fight, shoot and kill with tablet and smart phone games. Christina wrote in a blog post. Real guns are just as common.

That reality prompted Christina to list the reasons why she is not okay with violent play.

1. I want my kids to love like Jesus did. Instead of responding to hate and violence with aggression or passivity, Jesus loved people and found creative ways to end cycles of violence. When kids play with guns, they pretend to shoot and kill. That doesn't teach loving behaviour.
2. I want my kids to practice forgiveness—not only to apologize for the hurt they have caused others, but to forgive those who have hurt them, as Jesus taught us. Violent play exerts power over others and increases the divide between people. It leaves no room for forgiveness.
3. War is not a game. In the Philippines we have been mere kilometers from armed conflict and have witnessed its devastating effects. Families without homes. Brothers and fathers killed in battle. Children whose deaths are “justified” as collateral damage. We have driven past tanks and under helicopters. We've seen bomb smoke lingering in the distance.
4. My grandfather is a WWII veteran who became a pacifist. He described his experience as nothing short of hell. Although he found forgiveness for his actions at the foot of the cross, he struggled for years with the role he played in it as a Captain in the German Army. How can I let my kids pretend to shoot when my biggest role model suffered the realities of war?
5. Violence doesn't solve problems. We all have tendencies toward violence and my young sons are no different. But responding to violence with violence perpetuates the cycle. If I don't want my kids to strike out when they are angry, then I don't want them to “pretend” to strike out either.
6. While our actions might be good or bad, there are no “good guys” and “bad guys.” Concluding that people are either one or the other is contrary to Jesus' view. It is dehumanizing and fuels war.

“Playing with guns won't necessarily cause my children to choose violence as they grow up, but it certainly won't teach them anything about love and forgiveness,” Christina wrote in a recent article. “For us, teaching our kids this radical Jesus-way means we are not okay with violent play.”
